

pain and tragedy will lead further into the light for each soul that dies there. Each individual that suffered will reach away from suffering. Each one who died brutally will reach for life that is free of brutality. For each negativity, there is the opposite. There is a light-filled, essential optimism that must enter in, and it will as you move beyond emotion, judgment, mind, and self into the oneness and sense of divine truth that you all are. As you look at the entire entity evolving throughout creation, you will see that it is all slowly evolving into more and more beauty and consciousness, and that it is best not to get caught behind a boulder and see the world encaged from a small place.

Dharmic Understanding & Action

We show a picture of a wheel rolling, slowly, methodically, with all its spokes, a wheel with a direction and a purpose. Dharma is that wheel rolling within this temporal world. It is the wheel of a lifetime, the legs carrying you forward. It is each creation within your life, each action, year, phase, and indeed, each life building upon each other. The dharmic wheel spins forward, moving one into greater and greater consciousness, rolling down through the deep, dark valley of pain, unconsciousness, and anguish, getting mired in mud and yet always striving to move and always moving, even imperceptibly. It moves on through the mire, carrying the mud upon itself until it all falls away. The wheel moves in and out of the light, in and out of days and eras, the wheel of existence manifest. To define dharma is to open the consciousness to the great wheel of right-existence, the right-purpose and right-direction of existence.

Life is to be understood as the wheel of one's manifestations, of one's existence, and the process of God, consciousness, and all beings evolving. Dharma is right-action, directed movement, forward motion, and conscious development of life through existence. Dharma must be understood in expansive terms, in less expansive terms, and in very practical terms.

One can look at the great wheel of life purpose that sits within civilizations and humanity evolving throughout time. One can get the picture of the developments of consciousness through those great wheels turning. One can look at the wheel of one's own life that has been incurred and created, the direction that one's life has gone, what one has manifested is continuing to manifest.

One can look at dharma in terms of the progression of lives of an individual and how the wheel keeps turning, resuming where it left off, what it gathers in its course. How straight and true does the wheel turn? How likely is it to be mired in mud or to lead into dark vales of unconsciousness? The dharmic wheel is the embodiment of the consciousness in that being. It is all built into that wheel, its shape, its ability to go true and straight, to move easily or not. How does the wheel turn? How consciously does it turn? How conscious are you from one life to the next? How conscious are you from one decade to the next or from one day to the next? How able are you to see actions and results, see what sits at the basis of creation's events? How clearly can you see the outcomes that have come from the outset? How clearly can you see the wheel turning in your life?

Dharma then, in a closer meaning, is this attention given to consciousness, to truth, to purifying one's actions, beliefs, and thoughts, to constantly reshaping one's relationship to life and others according to the higher values of the doctrine of oneness -
